

Kim Bruguier
Leadership Statement

A leader's role in an organization is the key to the success of the group. When contemplating the role of President there is a clear difference between being a boss and being a leader. In any group it is critical for the President to think of themselves as a leader and not as that of a boss. A boss would manage the group, giving commands, driving the committee, demanding, while a leader strives to inspire those around them and pushes them to think creatively and innovatively, even independently. A leader coaches their committee, sets the tone and is the example to the group.